BIBLICAL HERMENEUTICS

What is Hermeneutics?

- Hermeneutics – refers generally to the overall process and principles of biblical interpretation. But also applies specifically to the subsequent act of interpreting for contemporary meaning within the larger two step process that begins with exegesis.
First Step – Exegesis
(discovering original meaning)

- Key is to read carefully to discern time, culture, and occasion in pursuit of understanding the original intent of the writing.
Typical Considerations: #1

- Historical/cultural analysis -- consideration of the historical and cultural milieu of the writer and audience. For example:

- understanding Jonah’s anti-salvation motive toward the Ninevites and his deep disobedience to God because of the historical conflict between the Ninevites and the Jews.

- discerning whether actions are classified as only descriptive (e.g., marching around Jericho) or as universally applicable / prescriptive (e.g., Peter being told to eat meats heretofore considered unclean)
Typical Considerations: #2

- Contextual analysis – consideration of the passage in relation to the whole body of the author’s writing. For example:

- Discerning the likely connection between God having Adam name the animals (Gen 2:19) – for Adam’s comprehension that he had no mate – and the earlier statement by God that Adam needed a mate (v. 18). All of this suggesting that God wanted Adam, by the way of naming the animals, to experientially know he needed a mate.

- Understanding that there is no mention of outer space in the so-called dominion mandate (Gen 1:26-28) since it would not have made sense to the ancient peoples.

- Perceiving that the phrase “within you” in Luke 17:21, should not be taken literally to mean the Kingdom is within those spoken to (the Pharisees) since they were not believers.
Typical Considerations: #3a

- Lexical systematical analysis – consideration of word definitions (lexicology) and relationships to one another (syntax)
- Aspects of lexical-syntactical analysis
- Identify general literary form. E.g.,
  - (1) prose is where literal meaning of words prevail,
  - (2) poetry, as in Psalms where words are often used symbolically;
  and
  - (3) apocalyptic literature as in Daniel and Revelation where symbolism and visionary writings prevail.
- Identify the genre or type of the various Books of the Bible (e.g., wisdom books, historical) since they have different implications regarding interpretation and implementation. For instance, many of the statements in the wisdom books are not necessarily promises but rather are wise sayings about how life generally operates (e.g., Prov. 22:6). In fact, by definition, proverbs are not commands.
Typical Considerations: #3b

- Identify natural divisions of the text (which don’t necessarily correspond to sentence numbering and chapter divisions).

- Identify how connecting words function to link ideas. What is the word “Therefore”, there for? (Rom 12:1; Gal 6:10; Eph 6:13).

- Understand word meanings since any word will have multiple meanings and the same word used in multiple text places will not always have the same Greek or Hebrew root word. For instance, the word “saved” in Acts 16:30 (Strong’s #4982) meant to deliver or protect. The word “saved” in 2 Peter 2:5 (Strong’s #5442) means to watch or be on guard. Likewise, the word “child” (KJV) in 2 Tim 3:15 actually means infant or pre-born (Strong’s #1025).
Typical Considerations: #4

- Theological analysis – consideration of the level of theological understanding at time of the revelation/writing. For example inferring that John the Baptist was challenging Jesus to break him out of jail; since Jesus was supposed to be THE conquering King (Matt 11:3).
Typical Considerations: #5

- Literary analysis – consideration of literary form. For example, seeing the actions that Jesus endorsed to keep from sinning as exaggeration/hyperbole on basis of not mutilating the temple of the Holy Spirit.
Typical Considerations: #6

- Other interpreters – comparisons with other interpreters
