General Counseling & Psychological Studies Concentration

The General Counseling & Psychological Studies concentration offers students the flexibility to design a concentration that aligns with their unique interests and career goals. This concentration consists of four courses (12 credit hours) selected from Regent MHPS concentration courses. At least one of the courses must differ from those included in an already established concentration. By choosing this option, students can "mix and match" courses to create a customized plan of study that best supports their professional development. Adding a new "General" concentration allows students to choose their own electives. This option would provide greater flexibility, reduce the number of petitions, and minimize situations where students share the same concentration but have taken different courses.
